I am a part-time artist living in Squamish and I've been exhibiting and selling my work for 7 years now.

I am self-taught, and over the years, I've learned how to paint through observation and experimentation.

I consider myself a painter, painting in a realistic style, yet, at the same time, I take subtle steps away from realism by mixing in looser, more expressive brush strokes, amping up the vibrancy and saturation of colours and simplifying or eliminating unnecessary details.

Shifting light on a landscape, contrast and bright colours spark my imagination and inspire me to transform reference photos into a painting.

Like many Canadian artists, I've drawn inspiration from the Group of Seven, and in particular, I find Lawren Harris' use of light mesmerizing.
